Re: Epic Games, Inc. v. Apple Inc., No. 4:20-cv-05640-YGR-TSH (N.D. Cal.)

Dear Lauren:

I write in response to your letter of this morning regarding Apple's attorney lists.

The individuals you identify in your letter are inhouse attorneys, litigation specialists, members of Apple's legal department, or employees who regularly work at the direction of counsel. Below we have listed each individual's relevant title or responsibility. Apple is not obligated to provide additional proof of these individuals' employment records and declines to do so.

Note that a number of the individuals you have listed are members of Apple's legal department in offices outside the United States. Several of the people you listed changed their name during the course of their employment (i.e. Annie Chen/Persampieri and Lauren Kelly/Hebb). Several of the individuals you listed, Anthony Brunetto, Jeff Peng, David Rice, Benson Shing, Donald Shruhan, Catherine Stevenson, Stephen Sun and Autumn Worley, are employees who work at the direction of Apple's inhouse counsel on global security issues, and whose job responsibilities include assisting the Apple legal department with ~~investigations concerning Apple Store operations and the app review process~~. Katie Stivers frequently supports the legal team; however, her status is irrelevant for purposes of evaluating privilege because entries on the privilege logs served in the Epic matter that involve Ms. Stivers are privileged based on the presence of many other attorneys. In light of these facts, Apple will not agree to re-review these documents based on your letter of earlier today.

Lorrie Bosse – Apple Legal Specialist, Internet Services

Anthony Brunetto – Technical Investigations and MFI, Production Services Engineer
